

CHILDREN:

The Missing Link Between Poverty and Development

Richard Jolly

Sir Richard Jolly is Honorary Professor and Research Associate of the Institute of Development Studies at the University of Sussex. Dr. Jolly is currently working on a 14 volume publication on UN's contribution to social and economic development since its creation in 1945. As a recipient of a Carnegie Scholarship in 2000, he is also working on a study of the trends in global inequity since 1820 and what can be done to narrow global income gaps over the next 50 years.

Richard Jolly is a trustee of OXFAM, a director of the Overseas Development Institute and Chairman of the UN Association of the United Kingdom. He was made a Knight of the Order of St. Michael and St. George in 2001 for his contributions to international development.

Prior to returning to England in 2000, Dr. Jolly was an Assistant Secretary-General of the United Nations, holding senior positions in UNICEF and UNDP for nearly 20 years. During his long and distinguished career with the United Nations, Dr. Jolly was the architect of the widely acclaimed Human Development Report. While in UNICEF, he influenced the agency's efforts to ensure that economic adjustment policies gave due priorities to the needs of children and women.

Richard Jolly graduated with first class honors in economics from the University of Cambridge in 1956, and in 1966 gained his doctorate from Yale University. He holds honorary degrees from the University of East Anglia (1988) and the University of Sussex (1991).