UNICEF Executive Director Ann M. Veneman concluded her landmark tour of Syria - by commending UNICEF's Syrian partners for their accomplishments in the field of children's issues.

SOUNDBITE, ANN M. VENEMAN, UNICEF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Touring a number of crucial UNICEF partnered projects, Ms. Veneman gained an insight into how such challenges are being met.

Stressing the importance of preventative integrated healthcare for Syrian and refugee families and their children, Ms. Veneman visited a thriving Public Health Centre in the Hussainya refugee camp.

The centre is rapidly becoming a model to be replicated across the country ... particularly in areas where drought and poverty is at its most extreme.

SOUNDBITE, ANN M. VENEMAN, UNICEF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR: "We've just talked to the women and the mothers, and what it's done is helped create networks of people. And I think that is really helping them to cope much better with the transitions they have made in their lives."

Ms Veneman was also immersed in the youthful exuberance of Iraqi refugees in a visit to Jaramana's innovative Adolescent Friendly Space.

She also visited two small entrepreneurial projects supported by microfinance.

Re-invigorated by the inspiring children, women, and adolescents met over the last few days, UNICEF will continue to champion the educational, healthcare and security needs of all young people within Syria.
