Voice over:

Play-time in Hebron.....

A rare opportunity for these young boys taking part in play activities many of us take for granted.

In a grinding conflict that has dragged on for more than five years and claimed the lives of hundreds of children ...

Life has been anything but fun and games for young Palestinians living in Gaza and the West Bank.

The psychological well being of these children has been affected by the stress and violence brought on by daily occurrences such as house demolitions, closures and even round-the-clock curfews.

With the help of the Humanitarian Aid Department of the European Commission – otherwise known as ECHO - UNICEF and NGOs have developed special projects to boost the well-being of Palestinian children.

SOT EU Rep:

"We try to improve the well being.....everyday life."

The tension brought on by violence has been spreading into homes and schools.

To help with this situation, UNICEF has launched projects for parents to help strengthen the family unit.

UNICEF's psychological oriented programs strive to provide children with appropriate support and protection....

And bring back some normalcy and joy into their fragile lives...

From the West Bank, this is Sabine Dolan reporting for UNICEF.
For every child, advance humanity.
