FROM FAITH TO ACTION:
WORKING WITH FAITH-BASED AND INTER-RELIGIOUS ACTORS TO PROTECT REFUGEE AND MIGRANT CHILDREN

Report following the ‘From Faith to Action’ online conference, 10 - 11 December 2020
Protecting refugee and migrant children requires multi-stakeholder collaboration and working across borders in complex political contexts. The contribution of faith-based and inter-religious communities and organizations can be vital to supporting children whose lives have been affected by forcible displacement or migration.

‘From Faith to Action’ is an initiative framed by UNICEF Europe and Central Asia Regional Office (ECARO) which brings together a wide range of stakeholders who share one overriding aspiration – to ensure that children escaping conflict, persecution, natural disaster or poverty are supported and protected physically, psychologically, and spiritually.

The collaboration draws on the expertise of senior religious leaders, faith-based organizations (FBOs), community groups and initiatives, academics, and UNICEF experts on refugees, migration and integration.

The collaboration is also informed by the experience and wisdom of children and families affected by forcible displacement or migration. The “From Faith to Action” conference was co-organized by UNICEF, the World Council of Churches (WCC), the Joint Learning Initiative on Faith and Local Communities (JLI), and the European Council of Religious Leaders - Religions for Peace (ECRL-RfP), and in collaboration with Islamic Relief Worldwide, A World of Neighbours (AWON), the Lutheran World Federation, and World Vision International. The online format convened 138 participants representing 68 organizations from 40 countries.

The conference featured migrant and integration support specialists, experts on refugee and child rights, alongside religious leaders, youth and migrant representatives, and academics. The two-day conference provided opportunities for participants to learn, share, and discuss:

1. Examples of best practices which illustrate the significant role that FBOs, religious communities, and religious leaders play in supporting and protecting vulnerable children, including children on the move.

2. In host communities, the role religious actors can play in building peaceful societies and combating xenophobia and discrimination against migrants and refugees.

3. The power of religious communities as policy influencers and as advocates for more inclusive approaches in response to the displacement of children and their families.

4. The importance of the continuum of child protection which, in the context of refugee and migrant children, ensures their access to vital social services, and spiritual and psychosocial support as they move from their country of origin to their country of safety.

WHY DO REFUGEE AND MIGRANT CHILDREN NEED SPECIAL ASSISTANCE?

Children by their nature, are at the most vulnerable stage of life. The severity of this vulnerability deepens when families are forced to leave their homes to escape conflict, persecution, or natural disaster or when there are no safe and legal avenues for migration.

The journey to find safety, protection and better opportunities is often extremely dangerous. For example, it is estimated that every day, more than one child dies along the perilous Central Mediterranean route from North Africa to Italy.2

Ensuring the safety of children on the move becomes a challenging and complex mission. Within refugee and migrant populations finding their way to better futures and settling into new lives, children can sometimes be the least visible and hardest to reach. And children who begin their journeys alone or who, along the way, become separated from their parents and family, face higher risks of abuse, violence and exploitation by people smugglers and human traffickers.

Religious communities and FBOs have a long history as advocates for children’s rights, and together with UNICEF, have collaborated on a range of programmes supporting children’s programmes around the world.

THE GROWING CHALLENGE OF CHILD REFUGEES AND MIGRANTS

In 2020, an estimated 94,800 refugees and migrants arrived in Europe from countries as diverse as Afghanistan, Algeria, Bangladesh, Morocco, Tunisia, and Syria. Nearly one in every five (18.5%) was a child.

At the end of 2020, there were some 60,000 refugee and migrant children in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Greece, Italy, Montenegro, and Serbia. Among them are 12,000 unaccompanied and separated children (UASC) whose lives depend on humanitarian assistance.

The COVID-19 pandemic certainly affected the influx of refugees and migrants into Europe in 2020. The European Union (EU) registered a 33% overall decrease in the number asylum applications. But the decrease was not evenly spread across Europe, and many local communities received unexpectedly large surges of new arrivals.

The pandemic raised many additional concerns about the health and safety of children and families. And UNICEF and partners have worked tirelessly to reach approximately 51,000 refugee and migrant children with a range of support, to protect the health and well-being during this crisis.

Especially worrying were the over-crowded conditions in which so many refugee and migrant children and families live. Which make it difficult to follow the basic rules for COVID-19 prevention – such as frequent handwashing and social distancing.

Refugee and migrants living close together have often faced a ‘double lockdown’ – with additional restrictions imposed on their confinements in settlements and camps, adding to their stress and their feelings of isolation.

As learning opportunities had to adapt from in-person to online modalities, a major concern was making sure that refugee and migrant children remained connected to education while access to Internet technology, digital devices, and mainstream channels was very difficult.

In Europe and Central Asia, the “From Faith to Action” initiative is built on the principle that a child is a child. The initiative seeks to strengthen partnerships that can help ensure protection, health, and education to all child refugees and migrants, reinforces the principle of the best interest of the child.

WHY WORK WITH RELIGIOUS COMMUNITIES ON PROTECTING CHILD REFUGEES AND MIGRANTS?

Religious communities have historically been one of the strongest advocates for the world’s most vulnerable children and families, providing them with guidance, aid and comfort.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) – the most widely ratified human rights treaty – reflects deeply-held values embedded within religious traditions for millennia. Religious communities and organizations have:

- A strong consensus about the dignity of life and rights of every child.6
- A wealth of institutional knowledge and experience in supporting children and young people living in extreme conditions, and often in the poorest communities.
- Deep cultural, religious, and traditional knowledge, that facilitates a level of trust, empathy, and communication.
- Significant local networks and resources to assist and familiarise migrant and refugee children with the integration process and ensuring they can access support from local services and authorities they deserve.

Evidence and experience clearly show that working with faith-based and inter-religious actors has the potential to enhance the impact and efficacy of work carried out by local and national governments, UN agencies, EU institutions, and not-for-profit organizations working on protecting and supporting refugee and migrant children.

WHY WORKING WITH FBOs AND INTER-RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS MATTERS FOR CHILDREN REFUGEE AND MIGRANT CHILDREN

BENEFITS

The conference participants recognised that partnering with FBOs and inter-religious organizations brings a wide range of benefits. For example:

1. Continuity of education is key for supporting and protecting children on the move and many FBOs and inter-religious communities have significant expertise in providing quality education. Many religious communities and faith-based schools offer values-based education, which emphasise important principles such as peace, respect, human dignity, dialogue, and mutual understanding. These lessons can provide skills for children integrating into religiously diverse/secular societies and communities.

2. Religious communities and FBOs are often transnational, multi-skilled, and sometimes multi-religious. These components are important in driving holistic and multi-stakeholder approaches to overcome challenges faced by refugees and migrants. Religious communities and FBOs often have the contacts and resources to support refugee and migrant children and young people during their journey. They can also be a familiar and reassuring presence for children and young people integrating into a new environment.

3. Religious communities and FBOs have a crucial role to play in tackling hate speech, fear, and xenophobia against refugees and migrants. To positively influence attitudes, many FBOs have initiated projects in host communities to enable people to meet face to face with refugees and migrants and learn more about their cultures, traditions, and customs. Many of these initiatives model inter-religious respect and cooperation, and break down negative stereotypes and preconceptions about migrants and refugees.

4. Religious communities often have access to local networks and organizations that can provide vital support for refugee and migrant children and young people integrating into a new society. This support could include arranging housing and material resources, providing guidance on accessing formal and informal education, social services, and legal advice.

5. Regulations and policies governing refugees do not always adequately protect the rights of the child and/or are not sufficiently enforced by national and local authorities. Religious actors have a tradition of speaking ‘truth to power’ and holding governments to account. Religious actors bring with them the authority and legitimacy of respected institutions and large communities.

6. FBOs and inter-religious communities have a hugely important role to play in offering spiritual support to child refugees and migrants healing from traumatic past events. Such support helps children to build a sense of belonging, and them to reaffirm their evolving identities despite extremely difficult and volatile contexts.
NEXT STEPS AND ACTION PLAN

The ‘From Faith to Action’ action plan was completed in February 2021, and will be used as a catalyst to:

- Consult further with FBOs and religious actors and seeking validation and support from valued partners across the Europe and Central Asia region.
- Continue consultations with UNICEF country offices to learn about their current work with religious actors, and to support future collaborations.
- Carry out work to map country level religious actors that will help in developing new and strengthening existing networks.
- Assist with collecting and sharing evidence on promising practices.
- Mobilize local and regional resources and building alliances at country level.
ACTION PLAN
SUMMARY

Policy/Advocacy Areas

- Enable all children, regardless of their status, access to education.
- Advocate for more flexible and inclusive education systems with greater links between formal and informal education.
- Promote policies which support religiously and culturally sensitive modes of reception.
- Advocate for policies that better support the reunification of refugees and migrants with their families.
- Provide oversight and monitoring of national government commitment and compliance with existing legislation aimed at guaranteeing legal and social protections for minors.
- Support advocacy and policies addressing drivers of forced migration, including climate-induced migration, to Europe.

Mobilizing Multi-faith Communities and Faith-based Organizations

- Initiate and/or support campaigns to support the continuum of child protection, making particular use of new and social media platforms.
- Work with local-level faith organizations and actors to enhance knowledge of relevant policies/global compact/rights of the child.
- Raise knowledge and awareness amongst partners and networks about the importance of religiously and culturally sensitive modes of reception and settlement for all refugees and migrants, including children.
- Provide training for faith actors to raise knowledge of internationally accepted standards in safeguarding children, and to build expertise on the effects of trauma on child refugees and migrants.
- Provide leadership on initiatives that positively influence attitudes and behaviours of local communities towards migrants and refugees, especially children.
- Provide leadership on initiatives to help tackle divisive and xenophobic narratives both within and between religious communities, and in the wider society.

Enhancing Collaboration and Learning for Best Practice

- Strengthen knowledge of religious and inter-religious networks and organizations to facilitate more effective multi-stakeholder approaches and partnerships between UNICEF, other UN agencies, national and local governments, and faith-based organizations and communities.
- Work with religious communities and leaders, including lay leaders and especially women and youth, to develop culturally and religiously appropriate approaches to supporting the spiritual and mental wellbeing of children on the move.
- Identify further examples of best practice in supporting children on the move and develop models and resources to disseminate to organizations working with child migrants and refugees.
- Strengthen the evidence base to support advocacy and policy initiatives and emphasize the moral and spiritual imperative of protecting children on the move.

CROSS-CUTTING RECOMMENDATIONS

‘From Faith to Action’ conference participants identified a number of cross-cutting themes considered relevant for all staff and organizations working with children on the move:

Youth participation

Safe spaces where children and young people on the move can speak out and be heard on issues that matter to them, should be created.

More young people from FBOs could be engaged to provide peer-to-peer mentoring and support.

Gender

Gender awareness should be integrated into all recommendations and actions, adapting them as necessary to respond to the needs of girls, boys, women, and men as needed.

Coordination

Equitable and sustainable partnerships and coalitions between government, religious (where possible interfaith), and refugee response actors should continue to be sought and built.

Homelessness…lack of access…isn’t normal. As professionals, we shouldn’t normalize the situation of refugees and migrants.

Elina Sarantou, Programs Manager at HIAS Greece

It is not enough to talk together. Serious efforts must be made to take action together.

Monsignor Robert Vitillo, Secretary General of the International Catholic Migration Commission (ICMC)

Inter-religious cooperation and religious freedom is part of western citizenship…No prejudice. No discrimination.

Imam Yahya Pallavicini, President of CO.RE.IS. (Comunità Religiosa Islamica), the Islamic Religious Community of Italy

Religious Literacy:

Enhancing staff capacity to understand the complexities and dynamics of religious traditions can help to ensure that partnerships with faith-based actors are always respectful and equal.
SOME KEY CONSIDERATIONS WHEN WORKING WITH FAITH-BASED ACTORS

‘From Faith to Action’ builds on UNICEF’s rich history of partnering with faith-based actors, and being a catalyst for inter-religious cooperation. Local and national governments, IOM, UNHCR and other UN agencies, EU institutions and bodies, and not-for-profit are strongly encouraged to build on existing partnerships and establish alliances that strengthen collaboration and support for refugee and migrant children.

Faith-based and inter-religious actors can take several different forms, ranging from local community groups and initiatives, to large, professional, transnational FBOs. It is important to have a good understanding of the context when working with religious traditions and communities, as are often complex and contested entities.

Background research and consultations with a wide range of religious and inter-religious actors, can be a good way to identify the appropriate faith-based and inter-religious partners. As well:

- Clearly appropriate levels of child safeguarding, accountability and transparency are non-negotiable. Some religious organizations and communities may not be legally constituted or formalised, but this does not mean they cannot be engaged through third parties or through other forms of partnership as they can often offer knowledge and expertise not always available in other types of organizations.
- Most FBO partners are knowledgeable about and conform to broadly accepted principles of humanitarian work, as well as their own religious motivations to care equally for others. When establishing partnerships, discuss key principles and each other’s understanding of these principles.

- There are many positive examples of the excellent work FBOs and inter-religious communities are doing to help child refugees and migrants. These case studies are an important resource for understanding best practice and how successful partnerships can be developed.
