Findings of the Review

The Development Effectiveness Review finds that UNICEF programming remains highly relevant and that UNICEF-supported projects and programmes align well with national development priorities. The Review identifies potential for improvements in the relevance of UNICEF programming through greater engagement with key stakeholders and through better needs assessment.

The report notes that UNICEF has given increased attention to equity and human rights-based programming, as well as greater commitment to innovation. However, certain areas are flagged for improvement. While the evaluations reviewed show increased attention to sustainability and gender equality, performance in these areas was still found to be mixed.

The Review finds that UNICEF-supported programmes evaluated from 2012 to 2015 have generally been successful in attaining their stated objectives. The Review also noted that UNICEF has been successful in its upstream work in support of policy and strategy development.

Promoting Gender Equality

The Review finds that UNICEF-supported programmes fail to adequately address gender equality. The most common reason given in evaluation reports is the absence of a gender perspective and/or the non-application of gender analysis during programme design and delivery.

UNICEF’s Focus on Equity

UNICEF evaluations published from 2012 to 2015 provide a strong indication that the evaluation function has responded appropriately to the re-focus on equity which began in 2010. Results on UNICEF programme effectiveness in improving equity are strongly positive. It has become clear from the Review, that future efforts to effectively address equity requires UNICEF and its partners to clearly identify the disadvantaged as a target group and to identify the barriers which impede their access to services.

Sustainability

The Review indicates that UNICEF has improved the level of attention paid to issues of sustainability. However, sustainability in terms of benefits flowing after programme completion remains a major challenge to most of the programmes. The Review points directly to the necessity for projects and programmes to plan for financial and programme sustainability.

Efficiency

The Review finds that the majority of UNICEF programmes have been efficient in controlling costs and using resources to achieve objectives on time. However, the Review points to the need for continuous attention to the cost- and resource-efficiency of UNICEF-supported programmes. They also highlight the need to strengthen systems and processes for monitoring programme costs and results in order to manage for efficiency.

Monitoring and Results-Based Management for Improved Effectiveness

The Review finds that while UNICEF has made substantial efforts to improve and strengthen monitoring systems and the use of results-based management (RBM) methods since 2012, this has not resulted in recognizable improvements. This indicates that effectively strengthening monitoring and RBM systems remains a serious challenge for UNICEF. Strengthening results monitoring, reporting and management at UNICEF requires a range of measures including capacity development for UNICEF staff and for implementing partners, as well as establishment of meaningful programme targets and monitoring systems. The mandate of the recently established Field Results Group responds directly to these challenges.

Innovation

UNICEF has made progress in fostering a commitment to innovation, including a willingness to experiment with different models of programme support and service delivery and to use emerging technologies in innovative ways. However, there are also indications that the emphasis on innovation can be strengthened by developing a clear definition of innovative programming and focusing greater attention to programming innovations during the design of programmes and services. There is also scope for greater emphasis on documentation and taking proven innovations to scale.

Conclusion

Despite the challenges, the Review finds that there is continued improvements in the overall development effectiveness of UNICEF. The Review makes appropriate recommendations to address the challenges and achieve better results for children.

Methodology

The Review was conducted through a systematic synthesis of information from a selected sample of evaluations published by UNICEF from 2012 to 2015. 66 evaluation reports were identified for systematic analysis, rating and coding of evaluation findings during the Review.

Each evaluation report was reviewed to assess the findings it reported against the following six key development effectiveness criteria:

1. Relevance of the Intervention
2. The Achievement of Humanitarian and Development Objectives
3. Cross Cutting Themes (Promoting Gender Equality and Equity)
4. Sustainability of Results and Benefits
5. Efficiency
The following recommendations are based on the findings and conclusions presented in the report. They indicate that UNICEF should:
