

2022 KEY RESULTS FOR CHILDREN

This year, UNICEF worked with a wide range of government and civil society partners to create a better world for Indonesia's children.

Over 26 million children from 9 months to 15 years of age were vaccinated against measles.

UNICEF supported Indonesia in hosting the global Sanitation and Water for All meeting of WASH, Environment, Health and Finance ministers to tackle the triple crises of COVID-19, economic challenges and climate change.

The ability of local government to integrate children's needs and perspectives in emergency preparedness was boosted by the Guidelines on Child-Centered Contingency Planning developed by BNPB and line ministries for roll-out in 2023.

Communication and behaviour change campaigns reached 55 million people about safely managed sanitation and 47 million people about safe return to school.

Climate Landscape Analysis for Children outlined the impacts of climate change on children and underscored the need for child-sensitive climate policies and climate-resilient social services for children to realize their potential.

Based on good practices promoted by UNICEF, local government resources were used to assist around 10,300 out-of-school children and 65,700 children at-risk of dropping out of school to continue their education across 31 districts.

Almost 160,000 young people (66% girls) were engaged in bullying prevention, building innovation skills and advocacy on issues such as mental health and climate action.

The Aksi Bergizi adolescent nutrition programme declared a national movement to be scaled up by joint ministerial decree with funding by the ministries of Education, Health, Home Affairs and Religious Affairs.

UNICEF and WHO supported the Ministry of Health to mount a polio outbreak response in record time in Aceh.

As of December, the ongoing immunization campaign reached 77% of 1.2 million children targeted children in 23 districts in Aceh.

Disrupting Harm, a landmark study about online child protection, was produced along with training modules for integrated child protection services and a web-based awareness raising platform Jogo Konco (Protect a Friend).

UNICEF supported the Government of Indonesia's response to the devastating earthquake in Cianjur across multiple sectors, including the deployment of prepositioned temporary learning solutions for 9,330 children and hygiene kits for 3,500 families.

MANY THANKS TO OUR PARTNERS AND SUPPORTERS!
