

HELP FOR PARENTS - TALKING TO YOUR CHILD ABOUT SEX AND SEXUALITY

FROM THE ST. JAMES PARENT SUPPORT ADVISORY TEAM (PSAT)

TALKING WITH YOUR CHILD ABOUT SEX AND SEXUALITY IS VERY IMPORTANT.

Some parents feel shy about talking with their children about sex. Others feel talking about sex will make children experiment with sex. Many parents are afraid to discuss sexuality because they feel they do not know enough.

Children today are learning about sex from many different places - schoolmates, television, movies, music, newspapers and books. Some of the messages are positive but many are negative. Sex is often glamourised or shown as something which all young people are doing.

As a parent you have your values and you know the messages you want to teach your children about sex. This is why it is important for parents to talk with children about sex. When you talk to your child about sex:

DO

1. Tell your children the truth/facts about sex.
2. Encourage children to talk with you freely.
3. Set the right example - let children see how you want them to behave.
4. Answer children's questions about sex. Get information from the clinic or library.

DON'T

1. Try to frighten children by telling lies about sex
2. Tell children that sex is "big people business" so they must not ask about it.
3. Say one thing but show another in your actions.
4. Ignore children's questions about sex. You can get help to answer from a nurse, doctor or counselor.
