Education and Conflict:
Research, Policy and Practice

11th and 12th April, 2006

Exeter College, University of Oxford
Introduction

Violent social conflict has increased sharply over the last half century, to become a major destabilising factor in many parts of the world. Such conflicts have been variously ascribed to inequalities between groups based on ethnicity, religion, access to goods and services (including education) or control of political power.

Large scale and intensive conflict leading to a breakdown in social order usually plunges a country into an emergency situation that requires humanitarian and other forms of response from the international community. The highest priority is normally given to saving lives and ending armed hostilities. Education has now been accepted as an integral part of such humanitarian response, because of its critical role in helping to restore normalcy, safeguarding the most vulnerable population (children), protecting girls and other groups of at-risk children, providing psycho-social care for traumatised young victims and beginning the process of reconstruction and reconciliation or peace building. Much experiential knowledge has been gained over the years in using education as part of humanitarian response and later reconstruction. At the same time research into social conflict suggests that education can be a causal factor that precipitates conflict as well as the answer to promoting tolerance, peace and social harmony.

So, although there is a powerful relationship between education and conflict, its direction is not always certain. Education can play an important role in unifying divided societies and mitigating conflict and violence, but it can also create or perpetuate inequality and hence intensify civil conflict and violence. The structure, content and accessibility of education help to determine if it serves to unify or to divide citizens. For example, explicitly teaching difference and the superiority of one ethnicity as against another or segregating schools can all be factors that perpetuate conflict.

This conference explores the relationship between education and conflict from a causal as well as a remedial perspective. It seeks to sharpen the debate about the potentialities of education in perpetuating or mitigating conflict, and so to stimulate policy dialogue about the nature of educational structures, content and accessibility in fragile, and conflict-prone societies. The conference will also review the role of education within an overall strategic international response to conflict and violence in terms of immediate humanitarian response as well as, more importantly, longer term reconstruction and reconciliation. Cross fertilisation of ideas and experiences from research on social conflict and from the practice of education response to emergencies will be used to generate a vibrant research agenda as well as to inform and guide policy and practice in education in emergencies and post conflict situations.

Organisation

The conference is jointly organised by the University of Oxford and the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF). It is hosted by the University of Oxford, Department of Educational Studies, Centre for Comparative and International Education. It aims to provide an opportunity for theoretical discussion about the determinants of conflict and the role of education in post-conflict reconstruction.

The first day of the conference will include presentations from UNICEF, UNESCO, the World Bank, the Inter-Agency Network for Education in Emergencies (INEE), Bilateral Organisations, and academics. A number of case studies will be presented. Key themes will include: theoretical underpinnings of education and conflict; and linkages between policy, practice, and research. The second day of the conference provides an opportunity to discuss and make inputs and recommendations to UNICEF’s new Education Strategy Paper, as well as to propose a new research agenda in this field and to agree upon a way forward between the agencies.

Objectives

- To develop a better understanding of the interrelationship between education and conflict, especially the causes of conflict, educational policies for its prevention and practical field-based examples of conflict resolution and post-conflict reconstruction.
- To discuss and evaluate the key educational strategies employed in humanitarian crises and post-conflict situations.
- To appraise UNICEF’s new education strategy with emphasis on its emergencies and post-conflict dimensions.

Travel Information

Directions

Exeter College’s front entrance is in Turl Street, just off George Street, in the heart of Oxford. If you are coming by car, parking is not easy. You may unload at the College entrance, but you may not park. Car Parking can be organised near to the college by prior arrangement (£10/day) There is also a ‘Park and Ride’ bus service that operates from Oxford’s ring road.

By rail

Trains run at least once an hour between Oxford and London, and twice an hour during peak times. Oxford is also on the main cross-country routes. The railway station is a mile (1.6 km) from the College. From London (which is 56 miles, 90 km from Oxford) there are regular trains from Paddington Station, and very frequent coaches from Victoria. For details of times and fares, telephone 0345 484950 (24 hours). Or visit http://www.rail.co.uk

By coach/ bus

The bus station is half a mile (0.8 km) from the College. There are regular bus services to Oxford from all the London airports, as well as a train link from Gatwick. The Oxford Bus Company (tel: +44 (0) 1865 785400) and the Oxford Tube (tel: +44 (0) 1865 772250) run frequent buses, 24 hours a day, between London (Victoria Bus Station) and Oxford.

Direct and regular services to Oxford from Heathrow and Gatwick airports are run by the Oxford Bus Company. Coach services from other parts of the country are also available. See the National Express web-site (www.nationalexpress.com) for more information.
