DEVELOPMENT GOALS
They are about children

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN...

The Millennium Declaration, Millennium Development Goals and 'A World Fit for Children'

Six of the eight Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) can best be met as the rights of children to health, education, protection and equality are protected. They will only be sustained as the rights of every child are realized. These same six match the goals set out in 'A World Fit for Children'.

And so, UNICEF's work with children necessarily assumes a central role in meeting both sets of goals – and in making the world a better place for all.

...AND THE MILLENNIUM AGENDA

- ▶ Collective commitment of the international community, united by shared values and the dream of a better future for all
- ▶ Every country, rich and poor alike, striving together to free the world from poverty
- ▶ Every UN agency working, within its mandate and through its alliances, towards a set of common goals
- ▶ Eight Millennium Development Goals setting an agenda, at once visionary and pragmatic, galvanizing change at the country level

WHY THE MILLENNIUM AGENDA?

So that all the world's people will enjoy their right to be

FREE

from want and fear

FREE

to sustain their lives on this planet

FREE

from poverty.

THE MOST URGENT
MDG
OF ALL

Eliminate gender disparity in primary and secondary education by 2005

Because: decades of research directly tie the education of girls to the goals of reducing poverty, hunger, under-five mortality, maternal mortality and fighting major diseases;

Because: even were the other goals for 2015 to somehow be met without ensuring girls and young women their right to a quality primary education, the achievements could not be sustained with undereducated girls and women;

Because: it takes seven years to complete a course of primary schooling, a gradualist approach of small increases every year will not do;

Therefore: if the Millennium Development Goals are to be met and sustained, we must rapidly move towards the goal of universal primary education by ensuring every girl her right to education – now.
