New training for nannies on child care, holistic development

AllAfrica

"When a country has data, what gets measured gets done," said Julianna Lindsey, the UNICEF representative in Rwanda.

"And since Rwanda will have this data, it can then use it to make sure that all disabled people, including children, have access to the services they need; and the government can use that information to prioritise and make sure that support goes to the area that has more people with special needs."
